The District Court assessed Orton's arguments regarding the validity of his guilty plea under the standard of reasonableness and concluded that the arguments were without merit. It also found that Orton's assertion of his innocence of drug charges in federal court did not raise a substantial issue of material fact. It therefore denied Orton's Rule 60(b) motion for relief from the judgment. 19 The District Court also granted the government's Rule 60(b) motion to vacate. The District Court found that when the government filed its Rule 60(b) motion it was unaware that Orton's Rule 60(b) motion had been denied. The District Court ruled that when the government filed its Rule 60(b) motion the only issue remaining in the case was the validity of Orton's guilty plea and that the government was entitled to raise the issue

Report this post Report this post Looking over the pros and cons for DayZ, I thought it would be best to start with just my own personal take on it. Pros: I never played DayZ, but I always thought it would be a good game for an online/P2P survival game. Early games of DayZ were awesome, in that you didn't really need the internet for anything because of the pure basics of the game. So I find the atmosphere of the game really eerie and haunting. Cons: I like the idea, but I don't think it can really be done right. Online players are messy. Everyone is there for their own reason, and they aren't really helping out others. You have to choose to play online at all, because if you don't the game ends The servers are going to have an excellent chance of crashing at any point. Because they are small and there are too many of them, a server crash means everyone becomes separated, and they are kinda forced into the role of finding people. If a server goes down, it basically means you never will get to talk to anyone again. Now, I know I think these are good points because I've witnessed them, but I guess my main point is that I didn't feel the same way about the
