KOS re: STARD's Survey - You've Been Warned Don't pretend that you didn't get the survey, the stats are there to prove it. No problem but what is it that you are waiting for? I've been trying to find an answer myself for months and still couldn't come up with a satisfactory response. This is, after all, a very short survey and I have never even mentioned STARD on the forum. What is the question in your mind? A problem with the survey? I am pretty sure that you didn't complain about the configuration of the function or about the "end of day" approach, but rather about the alleged mediocre results you have gotten with the "bundle of apps" approach. I am sure that there are more people in STARD than those who replied to your survey. I don't know who the respondents are, but I would assume that they are mostly those who are most motivated to contribute to STARD. In fact, you might be considered to be in a minority, but you are not the only one who holds that opinion. If you are bothered by the low results, here are two things that might help you: - First of all, the survey may be perceived as having been pointless, which is in fact not the case. It is only natural that people who aren't that interested to participate to a project would opt out. - Second, maybe you could start a survey on a dedicated forum: "What do you 1d6a3396d6
