Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an adjustable bed, and more particularly to an adjustable bed providing a plurality of rocking angles for use in a sickbed, a nursing bed or a therapy bed. 2. Description of the Related Art Adjustable beds are known in the art, and are commonly used in nursing, therapy or sickbed applications to provide a desired level of support to a person in a reclining or sitting position. U.S. Pat. No. 5,054,925 (Thompson) describes an adjustable bed including a frame with a plurality of air chambers formed therein. The air chambers are individually formed by a plurality of air bags, and the air bags are individually deflated and inflated to adjust the rocking angle of the bed. The Thompson patent is hereby incorporated by reference. U.S. Pat. No. 6,688,396 (Illingworth) describes a bed with a base frame having a front section, a rear section and a middle section, and a plurality of hydraulic pistons attached to the base frame. The hydraulic pistons are selectively controlled to move the front and rear sections of the base frame between a first position in which the front and rear sections of the base frame are substantially vertical and a second position in which the front and rear sections of the base frame are inclined with respect to the middle section of the base frame. The Illingworth patent is hereby incorporated by reference. U.S. Pat. No. 6,871,235 (Laurent) describes a method and system for providing a mattress-raising device for an adjustable bed. The mattress-raising device includes a control module for receiving signals from a controller associated with the adjustable bed, and a drive module connected to the control module and the adjustable bed for moving the adjustable bed between an elevated position and a lowered position. The mattress-raising device is actuated by the control module to raise and lower the adjustable bed. The Laurent patent is hereby incorporated by reference. U.S. Pat. No. 6,927,630 (Breedlove) describes an apparatus for adjusting the angle of an individual in a bed. The apparatus includes a frame having at least a lower frame and an upper frame. The lower frame is releasably attached to the upper frame. An air chamber
